A HAUNTED MAINTOP.

How a Talkative Payrot Frightened the Tars of an English Ship.

Talking about ghosts, writes a correspondent of the Sheffield (Bug.) Telegraph, our chief mate once told me that on board a ship in which he once served the mute on duty ordered some of the youths to reef the maintopeail. When the first got up he heard a strange voice saying: "It blows hard!" The lad waited for no more; he was down in a trice and told his adventure. ad immediately ascended, laughing at the folly of his companion, but returned even more quickly, declaring he was quite sure that a voice not of this world had cried in his ear: "It blows hard!" An-other went, and another, but each came back with the same tale.

A length the mate having sent up the whole watch, ran up the shrouds himself, and when he reached the haunted spot heard the dreadful words distinctly uttered 'It blows hard [''] in his ear:

"Aye, aye, old one; but blow it ever so bard, we must ease the ear-rings for all that," replied the mate, undauntedly, and, looking round, he saw a fine parrot pe on one of the clews—the thoughtless author of the false alarms—which had probably es-caped from some other vessel to take refuge

Another of our officers mentioned that on one of his voyages ho remembered a boy having been sent to clear a rope which had got foul above the mizzentop. Present y, however, he came back trembling, and al-most tumbling to the bottom, declaring that he had seen "Old Davy" aft the crosstrees. Moreover, that the evil one had a huge head and face, with prick-ears and eyes as bright as fire. Two or three others were sent up in succession, to all of whom the apparition glared forth, and was identi-fied by each to be "Old Davy," sure enough.

mate, in a rage, at length mounted himself, when resolutely, as in the former case, searching for the bugbear, he soon ascertained the innocent cause of so much terror to be a large horned owl, so lodged as to be out of sight to those who ascended on the other side of the vessel, out which, when any one approached the cross-trees, popped up his portentous visage to see what was coming. The mate brought him down in triumph, and "Old Davy," the became a very peaceful shipmate among the crew, who were no longer scared by his horns and eyes, for sailors turn their back on nothing when they know what it is.

Had the birds in these two instances departed as they came, of course they would have been deemed supernatural visitants to the respective ships by all who had heard the one and seen the other.

SOME QUEER WILLS.

Extraordinary Documents Copied from South Carolina Court Records.

In overhauling some of the old books in Gleason has, according to the Charleston News and Courier, come across some queer ocuments. Here are some of them: man, who has been dead so long that he shall be nameless, was hanged in Charleston for murder. He protested his innocence to the last, and the day before his execution made a mill leaving his personal property, valued at $439 in money, and a silver watch and chain to his relative. The last clause of the will is as follows:

"A.I'am to be hung to-morrow for the murder of -, of which crime I am innocent, and firmly believing that I was found guilty by a packed jury, I bequeath to this jury eternal damnation, and in order that their names may be known to posterity I herein insert their names, —, foreman, and eleven others. I order and direct that my executor hereinafter named shall deliver body to the medical students of Charlesmy bones properly cleaned, my skeleton properly mounted, so that it will pass down as a proof of the bribery and corruption used in the conviction of an innocen-

Another man, long since deceased, and who was evidently a wealthy Frenchman, after disposing of his estate, provides for an erring daughter as tollows:

"It is to me a great cause of mortification and regret to mention the name of Ciotilde, my daughter, now twenty-three years old.

my daughter, now twenty-three years old.

To protect this instrument I bequeath to her one barleycorn. I pray she will repent and preparito for the Lord's forgiveness."

Another man, who was a widower, and had an only daughter who seems to have been the cause of much trouble to her father, disposes of his estate and gives to his daughter "My blood horse, Jim, feeling satisfied that if she will either ride or drive. satisfied that if she will either ride or drive him it is likely she will be brought home a corpse, in which satisfactory event then let the horse be sold and the proceeds given to

- How the Sext in Figured It.

Two ladies entered a fashionable church in New York just before the services began, and one of them remarked to the sexton that the star on the pulpit, in which were a great many gas jets, had the point turned the wrong way, and that it should point up instead of down. The dignified old man, feeling that his quarter of a century's experience should entitle his opinion to respect, and realizing the difficulty of making a change, straightened up and said: "Laddes, we are told in the Scriptures that the star hung over the manger to lead the wise men thither. If it was to guide them to the sacred spot and direct them to the manger, or course it would point down and not up." The star remains as it was.
